Along the way we will stop at two different locations to sample the latest interpretations of typical Chilean ingredients, and finish with a wine tasting and food pairing. Our route will also take us past boutique clothing stores, museums, food stores, wine shops, book stores and more. ### DAY 2

We will pick you up the next morning at 10am to spend a day experiencing Santiago's culinary roots, and their vast contrast in Chile's social landscape. We start in the heart of the city's Plaza de Armas for a narrative on how Chile's food has formed and evolved, blending the traditions of its native communities and endemic ingredients with the tastes and traditions of multiple waves of immigrants. Starting with Spaniards, with plenty of German influences and now the arrival of Peruvians, Colombians and more have given the capital a face lift in terms of its food.

We will walk through four separate food markets that together make Santiago's most vibrant market quarter, referred to as La Vega. A vibrant but chaotic collection of produce stands, street vendors and hawkers that has drawn Chilean food lovers from all of its segregated social classes.

Along the way we stop at four to five places to sample typical Chilean food and drink. Many of what we will sample can be described as a staple dish or drink, but are rarely found on the menus of its more formal restaurants or at hotels.

Our final stop in the market is at Mercado Central, Santiago's fresh fish market lined with restaurants frequented by both locals and foreigner visitors.

Now it's time for the contrast and head uptown to the modern commercial center of El Golf and head to a gourmet market for a tasty dessert.

Then it's back to the hotel at 4pm. Evening is free, or we can arrange for a special dinner or assist with restaurant reservations.

Wine is one of Chile's greatest ambassadors, and this slim South American country was home to some of the first wine grapes in the New World, brought by Spanish Jesuits in their missions and expansion of the Colonial Empire. Today the influences go far wider, incorporating commercial French grapes into this rich and giving terrior. No wine lover should miss a chance to make a wine visit the central theme of their stay while passing through Santiago, or as a destination itself.

DAY 2

Now that you've had a brief introduction to Santiago, its history and the wine, it's time to set out for the surrounding wine country. In a small group of no more than 8 people, (Private option available), we will pick you up at the hotel and set forth to the Casablanca at 9:00am, making the 40 minute drive into the Casablanca Valley.

Once in the valley, we will visit three of its unique and innovative vineyards:

-Bodegas RE- formed by Pablo Morandé, whose family laid the groundwork that would lead the valley into what it is today. Bodegas RE prides itself on wines of unique character, and in doing so has turned back to the roots of Chilean wine making, employing large Amphora in their production.

-Kingston Family Vineyards- Also a generational project, starting in 1918, marked by the arrival of Carl John Kingston from Michigan's Upper Peninsula. Tucked away in a hidden corner of the Casablanca Valley, the project has evolved over the years, with roots in the mineral trade which would lead to agriculture, dairy cattle, grape growing and finally, wine. With a close relationship to Pinot Noir winemakers in Napa Valley, Kingston embodies a blend of Chilean terrior with its international roots. But most importantly are the stunning views of the valley and its award winning wines, all presented in an exclusive and detail orientated setting.

Casas del Bosque- Founded in 1993 Casas del Bosque has a spread of wines that cover the range of possibilities for the Casablanca Valley: Chardonnay, Riesling and Sauvignon Blanc, and well as reds, Merlot, Carménère, Syrah and Pinot Noir. It also grows Cabernet Sauvignon in the not so far off Rapel Valley. Owned by the family behind one of Chile's largest department stores, Falabella, but the project is under the guidance of an expert winemaking staff. This staff is permanently devoted to the Casas del Bosque project, and formed by the following professionals: Grant Phels, Master in Science of Viticulture and Oenology at the Lincoln University of New Zealand; Patricio Aravena, Universidad Católica, Chile; Pilar González as the vineyard enologist advisor, with Hernán Amenabar, both from Universidad Católica, Chile. Their facilities and restaurant are an echo of the quality in their wines.

Loma Largo- Tracing their roots back to the great-grandfather of its current owners, Don Manuel Joaquín Díaz Escudero Alvarez de Toledo, who made successive trips to Europe and brought back with him cuttings of vines that would be planted here in Chile, founding the roots which would inspire the vineyard today. Nestled between hills, or lomas this boutique vineyard is under the care of winemaker Tamara Baeremaecker, whose 18 years of experience has put her at the head of Chile's most celebrated wines, like mass wine maker Concha Toro's coveted Don Melchor. But Loma Largo represents the contrast to the large vineyards, offering instead a peaceful corner of the Casablanca valley to provide a country and home-style setting for your visit.

House – Casa de Vino- A facility that offers everything a visitor might want to experience when visiting the Casablanca Valley. Owned by Grupo Belen, part of the Yarur family, whose patriarch Juan Yarur used success in the textile industry to enter the world of banking, wine, art and fashion. House Casa de Vino has a gourmet food store with local products from the valley and beyond, tasting facilities a full service restaurant and a green groove in the back for enjoying Chile's fine Mediterranean weather. This is also a favorite of ours for lunch, with wine and food pairings orchestrated by its Chef Felipe Espinosa. His work in the kitchen reflects his time working abroad in Madrid and Brazil.

After our three visits, we will return to Santiago at around 6pm.

The Wine Capital

DAY 3:

Today we will pick you up at your hotel and head to the Maipo Valley, home to Chile's bold red wines and some of its most important vineyards. We will visit two vineyards, one big and one small, in order to feel the difference in their winemaking style, winery design and operation.

Vineyard choice depends on availability, but some of the options are:

-Perez Cruz- A family owned project that has blossomed into an award winning vineyard. Perez Cruz produces a selection of reds, and also has one of the most unique wineries built in Chile. Visiting is an experience all to itself.

-Santa Rita- One of Chile's largest producers of wines, and has developed a potent tourism business that adds a bit of history with its industrial wine making. The grounds include two national monuments, its incredible cellar and the casona where its restaurant Doña Paula is located, and also has an Andean museum on hand as well.

-Haras de Pirque- A fine producer of red wines located in the community of Pirque, which lies just across the Maipo River from the Santiago metro area. As a "Hara" (stables) it also is a breeding center for horses, and the grounds can be visited as well upon request.

-Aquitania- Nudged between Santiago and the base of Cerro San Ramon, this vineyard is actually within the city limits. A boutique, French and Chilean owned wine maker with quality red wines.

We will visit two vineyards, and after the second one enjoy a relaxing lunch at the vineyard, paired with their wines.

DAY 2

Now it's time to get to "work". Your host will be by the hotel at 9:30am to get a tasty day started. First we head to the vibrant and chaotic market quarter to peruse the wide selection of fresh produce that arrived that morning. Here you'll have a chance to see the ingredients, both big and small, which make the colorful fabric work of Chile's cuisine. La Vega, as it is called, is known not just for being a trusted early morning spot for produce wholesalers and distributors, it the best place to buy for home meals as well. With a strong influence from Chile's newest immigrants, especially from the northern neighbor of Peru, the market is a cultural and culinary setting unlike any other in the rest of the country.

We will select fresh ingredients for our lunch, stopping to comment on the cultural side and share with our "caseros" or regular shop owners.

After the market it is time to get cooking. We head to a private home to prepare a fresh market meal. Depending on the season and availability of products, we will tailor a set of dishes that are both delicious and fun to prepare, but that can also be replicated back home. A PDF and print out of the recipes that we.

This includes fresh sopaipillas and pebre to get things started. And no proper meal in Chile is complete without a pisco sour. Our meals generally focus on the rich variety of sea food available, but it is flexible depending on the tastes of the participants.

Feel free to participate actively in the preparation of the meal, or sit back, enjoy your drink and the conversation.

After our meal we will head back to the hotel, and you have the rest of the afternoon and evening at your leisure.

As an alternative, as about visiting our quaint country home in Campo Gourmet instead of cooking in the city.
